

entered, found the Princess dejected, and asked her the reason. "Ah!" said Elmina, "look at my flowers, and yet I have done nothing to occasion it."

Elmina was in reality innocent; for she perceived not that there was any harm in what had excited her laughter; but the flower of modesty had reason to be tarnished, and the flower of beneficence to droop its head, because a young lady ought